Hey Visionaries!

Welcome back to campus for the Fall 2021 Semester! It's been a while since we've met face to face, but Trojan Vision is ready to reenter the studio and get to work. We will be resuming in-person production after an entire school year of creating content virtually. We can't wait to see what our students will create over the coming semester!

Looking to get involved with Trojan Vision? There's still time! Check out the information about our available course options below!

There are still a few openings for both Trojan Vision production classes:

- CTPR 409: Practicum in Television Production
- CTPR 404: Practicum in Podcast Production

Ever wanted to get hands-on experience on a live television set or considered making your own podcast? Enroll in a Trojan Vision course this semester! Our courses are designed to give students practical experience that will hone the skills needed to find work in TV or podcast production.

This semester, each 409 section will produce weekly episodes of our most popular Trojan Vision shows: The Morning Brew, Scoop, Delish, Soundstage, The Breakdown and The Water Cooler.

Trojan Vision also debuts a new course, Practicum in Podcast Production (CTPR 404), this fall. Modeled on the television production class, 404 students learn while practicing the essential skills of producing an original video podcast. This course is part of the new USC Podcasting Minor, an interdisciplinary program from SCA, Annenberg and SDI.

September 10th is the deadline to add or drop classes for the fall 2021 semester.

If your preferred section of 409 or 404 is full and you'd like to be placed on a waitlist, send your request, including the section that fits your schedule, to info@trojanvision.com.

If you're unable to register for Trojan Vision classes this semester but would like to in the future, try volunteering to get started. Trojan Vision is looking for volunteers to help produce, edit, design graphics, host shows, and more!
